LETTERS CONCERNING SOME LITCHFIELD LAW SCHOOL NOTEBOOKS

ELIZABETH FORGEUS

Assistant Law Librarian, Yale University Law Library

SEVERAL letters written early in the last century by a student of the Litchfield Law School have recently come to the attention of the writer. They make an interesting addition to our knowledge of the everyday life of the school already gleaned from the letters of other students, and are of especial importance because, written in 1810, they antedate both the letters printed in Kilbourn's Bench and Bar of Litchfield County<sup>1</sup> (one of which is dated 1829 and the other 1830) and Mansfield's celebrated description of his life at Litchfield during the years 1823-1825, told in his Personal Memories.

The writer of these letters, Ebenezer Baldwin, came of a family famous in the legal annals of Connecticut. He was the eldest son of Simeon Baldwin of New Haven (Yale 1781), and Rebecca Sherman, his wife, who was the daughter of Roger Sherman, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. At the time the letters were written, Simeon Baldwin was a judge of the Superior Court and of the Supreme Court of Errors of Connecticut. Judge Baldwin sent two of his sons, Ebenezer and Roger Sherman, to study at the Litchfield Law School. Roger Sherman Baldwin, the younger of the two, in time became a United States senator and a governor of Connecticut, and was for many years one of the most famous lawyers of the state. His brother, Ebenezer, with whom we are concerned, was also a man of brilliant intellect, but his legal career, which began with as much promise as that of his brother, was cut short by ill-health. He was born on May 20, 1790. Graduating from Yale in 1808, he had then gone to teach in a school near Easton, in Talbot County, Maryland, but teaching was merely an interlude between his college and professional training. He returned to New Haven in 1809, and in the spring of 1810 entered the Litchfield Law School.

The school was commonly known at that time as "Judge Reeve's School," from its founder, but James Gould had been associated with Reeve in its management since 1798. In 1810, the period when these letters were written, the school was entering upon the most prosperous years of its history,<sup>2</sup> and was attracting students from all parts of the United States. Seven of the fifty members of the Yale class of 1808 were enrolled there.

All of Ebenezer Baldwin's letters here quoted<sup>3</sup> were addressed to his father in New Haven. The first letter was apparently written very shortly after his arrival:

Litchfield March 23d 1810

Dear Father—

When coming out of the office this morning I accidentally met with A. S. Jones, who informs me, that he shall return to New Haven this afternoon. I embrace this opportunity of informing you a little more particularly concerning my situation. The routine of my business is as follows—breakfast 1/2 past 7 o'clock—From 8 to 10 I read a lesson upon which I had previously studied the day before—at 10 attend the lecture and take notes—From 11 until dinner time I am employed in copying and correcting my notes for preservation. After dinner I recite untill 3—the remaining part of the afternoon and the evening are devoted to the lesson of the succeeding day and to the other avocations of law.—Mr Gould has lectured the whole time since my arrival, untill to day when Judge Reeve commenced and will probably continue for some time. As a lecturer (as far as heresay and observation) have enabled me to determine Mr. Gould is more methodical, and perspicuous than the Judge.—He is more abundant in authorities, and does not digress so much, into subjects unconnected with the particular title under discussion. Judge Reeve heretofore I am told has not preserved his notes but has formed new ones for every course. This time however he pursues a different plan—We are at present upon the defences to action of assumpsit.

The room which I occupy was principally furnished by its owners—except a few articles which I have been obliged to purchase. There will be no need of my having a bed sent up.

The library attached to the office is a pretty large one, but the elementary books are so seldom to be procured there, that the students generally prefer purchasing the volumes they wish to read. In addition to what I requested in my note by Beers I should be glad if you could spare them to have Woodesons Lectures and Coke on Littleton sent to me. I understand that a Mr. Brace expects to carry Mr. Beecher<sup>4</sup> to New Haven the beginning of next week and bring home Miss Pierce<sup>5</sup>—perhaps if you can find no other opportunity that might be a good one.

Since I commenced studying I have been upon Blackstone. I thought it best to revise Blackstone thoroughly before I began upon any other author.

From your affectionate son

E. Baldwin

The second letter, written more than a month later, is of interest for its minute account of expenses:

Litchfield April 26th 1810

Dear Father—

My situation in Litchfield still continues to be agreeable, indeed I think from the beauty of the weather that we are not to inhabit a region of continual frost, as I had some reason to apprehend from my partial acquaintance with it previous to my last departure from New Haven.

Last Sunday I spent with my roommate at Bethlehem, where I spent my time very agreeably in the families of Mr Bellamy & Backus.

Since my residence here I have received a number of invitations to teaparties, which I have generally improved, but I find my time so much employed by my

• Ebenr Baldwin

In July, 1810, four months after Ebenezer had entered the law school, Judge Baldwin had an offer from John Lovett, a lawyer of Albany, New York, to "exchange sons"; that is, Mr. Lovett wished to send a son of his to Yale and take some student from New Haven to read law in his office and to live in his family, the board of the two young men to be an exchange "month for month." The students at Litchfield customarily supplemented their study by practical work in a law office (a requirement for admission to the bar in many of the states), and Judge Baldwin submitted the proposition to his son, but added that he should not wish him to accept if it would prevent his finishing his Litchfield course. On July 25, 1810, Ebenezer Baldwin answered his father's letter favorably:

Litchfield July 26 1810

Dear Father—

I received two or three days since your letter in which you state a proposal from Mr Lovett of Albany to an exchange of board &c between his son and me. The letter had remained in the office some time before I procured it—this, together with the importance of the subject contained in it must constitute my excuse for not giving it an earlier answer. I have however at length concluded, that as the plan seems accordant with your feelings, and as the State of N. York (tho crowded with Lawyers), still is fast settling and increasing in business—it will be best for me to accept the offer. The prejudices which I had formed with regard to the western country farther South have not entirely vanished, but the superiority of New York in point of its local situation, and manners of its inhabitants doubtless ought to have great weight in forming a decision. . . .

My time is now principally occupied in copying Lectures; as I shall not stay here long enough to hear a course delivered. The time usually occupied in delivering a course is I believe 16 months. I shall however be enabled to procure me a very good course before my year will expire. . . .

On November 21, 1810, he wrote:

. . . The number of the Law School increases almost every day—it is larger at this time than at any preceding period—it probably is not far from fifty. I have been engaged in reading the principal part of the last ten weeks. I find great advantage from Mr Bacon's library, and have also been considerably indebted to his personal attentions in the line of my business.

My course of lectures might be completed in a fortnight, if I should devote my whole time to them—but I shall postpone their completion, to the time immediately preceding my departure from Litchfield. . . .

Ebenezer Baldwin set out for Albany early in February, 1811, having been in the Litchfield Law School since March of the preceding year, a period of about eleven months. The notebooks upon which he spent so many laborious hours are now preserved in the restored building of the Litchfield Law School, which stands on its original site beside Judge Reeve's home in Litchfield, Connecticut. There are five volumes, much worn, bound in boards with leather back and corners. An examination of the contents of these volumes shows that the way in which Mr. Baldwin was "enabled to procure" his "very good course" within a year's time, was by copying some of the lectures from the books of other students and from Mr. Gould's own notes. Certain of the lectures are marked, "copied from J. H. Bellamy;" and, inserted in the lectures on Executors and Administrators is an entry "These lectures . . . were delivered by Mr. Gould and copied from his notes."

Mr. Baldwin carried his notebooks with him to Albany, and the first volume contains on its flyleaf the annotation "Obtained Judge Kent's order for my clerkship February 11, 1811, for three years and filed it with the clerk as of the same day." Evidently he did not stay with Mr. Lovett for the entire period of his clerkship, for below this note is another entry, "Entered the office of Messrs Bleeker & Sedgwick May 4, 1812." He was admitted to the New York bar in 1813, and settled in practice in Albany. Dexter, in his Biographical Sketches of the Graduates of Yale College, records that he "attained distinction in the literary and political circles of the city." He was master in Chancery, County Surrogate, Alderman, City Recorder, and military aide to Governor De-Witt Clinton, with the rank of Colonel. About 1828, his health having failed, he gave up his profession and returned to New Haven, where he occupied himself with literary work. One of his writings, Annals of Yale College (New Haven, 1831), is a compilation of permanent value; and he contributed to many literary undertakings. In 1836 he started a monthly periodical, The American Historical Review, of which, however, only six numbers had been issued when his health obliged him to cease all work. He died in New Haven on January 26, 1837.

CURRENT COMMENTS

The complete proceedings of the meeting together with all addresses, papers and annual reports will be published in the September, 1939, number of the JOURNAL.

JOHN T. VANCE, Law Librarian of Congress and a past president of the American Association of Law Libraries, was elected president of the LAW LIBRARIANS SOCIETY OF WASHINGTON, D. C., at a meeting held on Wednesday, May 31, 1939, at American University. Matthew McKavitt, Law Librarian of the Department of Justice, who has been serving as temporary chairman since the organization meeting of the group on April 18, was elected vice president. SOMMER, of the New York University School of Law, was the guest speaker at the dinner meeting of the LAW LIBRARY ASSOCIATION OF GREATER NEW YORK held on Monday evening, June 5, 1939, at the Therese Worthington Grant Restaurant, 284 Park Avenue, New York City. Dean Sommer stressed the need for studying the background of law and declared that "the law is not only what the judges say it is, but what they do." He recommended the addition to libraries of biographies of judges and urged that librarians "continually add to this material and watch the resulting law as it develops to meet new needs and new conditions."

THE CHECK LIST OF CURRENT AMERICAN STATE REPORTS AND SESSION LAWS EXCLUSIVE OF SIDE REPORTS is not included in this number of the JOURNAL because only a few new volumes have been published since the last list was printed in the May, 1939, number of the LAW LIBRARY JOURNAL. THE DIRECT ROUTE TO THE LIVING LITERATURE OF THE LAW

The one sure method of keeping up with important literature and opinions appearing in the leading legal periodicals and bar association reports.

INDEX TO LEGAL PERIODICALS

The Index to Legal Periodicals provides the key to the wealth of vital material constantly appearing in professional publications in the United States and other English speaking countries. Over 100 periodicals are thoroly and competently indexed, in addition to the reports of many bar associations.

Entries are arranged alphabetically according to subject and author making it easy to locate any single article or all the articles on a particular subject. A table of the cases commented upon is also given. So that the Index will be all inclusive, current book reviews and new biographical material are indexed. Each subject entry is accompanied by a brief descriptive note where the title is not sufficiently self explanatory and cross references are included to direct attention to related articles.

Subdivisions are employed wherever it is deemed necessary with the result that listings under such broad subjects as courts, constitutional law, corporation law and criminal law remain easily accessible.

The Index to Legal Periodicals is published bi-monthly with annual cumulations and three year cloth bound volumes cumulating in one alphabet the indexing for the three preceding years.

It therefore gives to the legal profession and the librarian a reference to available published material and a permanent record. Such a guide is invaluable for it keeps the user informed on new thought and interpretations and points the way to authoritative opinions on abstruse points of law.

Law libraries and public libraries pay the service basis rate which is graded according to the magazines included in the Index which are taken by each subscriber. Special rates are quoted to individuals and law firms.

Annual cumulations for the years 1908-1925 are available at $5.00 each with the exception of the years 1921 and 1922 which are out-of-print. Four of the three year cumulated volumes, covering the years 1926-1928, 1929-1931, 1932-1934, 1935-1937 may now be purchased separately at $9.00 each.

Annual subscriptions include the bi-monthly numbers, the annual cumulation and the three year cumulated bound volumes.
